Thank you for your continuous support and generosity for helping students from Asha slum communities break every barrier and achieve great successes in lives. Each year, Asha high school leavers prove that they can be at par with their peers. We strongly believe that education is not a luxury, rather the single most powerful human right. So, we ardently pledge to have 100% literacy in our slum communities in Delhi. You can do your bit too.

Against all odds, a cobbler’s son aces class 12 exams scoring 90.75%

Growing in sheer misery, 17-year-old Hariom, a son of a cobbler from Tigri slum community never imagined that he would one-day score 90.75% in his class 12 exams, thereby becoming one of the toppers (fourth) in Asha’s 2017 high-school leaving batch.

Born in an extremely challenging environment, the young lad achieved a mark many from an affluent background can only aspire to.

“My father’s meagre income wasn’t enough to support my education although he so dearly wanted to. I have three younger siblings to take care of. But things changed when I came across Asha,” recalls Hariom.

Hariom says the books and study materials Asha provided have been a great help to him. “The Asha team at times spent hours counselling and motivating me to achieve this percentage. They instilled hope in me”, says a humble Hariom.

Backed by everyone at Asha, Hariom persevered harder each day and in June this year achieved a score he believes was an accumulated effort by the Asha team and him.

A meticulous student throughout, Hariom has now secured a seat at the prestigious College of Art, Delhi, with an aim to paint like M.F.Husain, an Indian painter of international acclaim.

Hariom’s success is one of the many experiences that inspires Asha to move ahead with a strong belief and a stronger resolve to give back to society.

Finding Asha at the right time was a life changing experience for Gomti

After getting married at an early age, Gomti, originally hailing from Uttar Pradesh, India, started living with her husband and in-laws in East Delhi. The 23-year-old was naive and didn't understand at first the severe state of her gynaecological problems. Rather she had inhibitions discussing them. However, some ten months ago pressurised by her in-laws on questions about her fertility, Gomti confided in her cousin who lives nearby Seelampur slum community.

After experiencing no success at several other clinics, her cousin recommended that Gomti visits the Asha centre at Seelampur. She started to have a ray of hope after listening to the several successful pregnancy cases being treated there.

In March 2017, Gomti visited the Asha Centre and shared her medical history with the Asha team. The diagnosis followed through with ultrasound, blood tests, a proper diet chart and daily dosage of iron folic along with vitamin tablets.

Now, after four months of treatment, Gomti is two months pregnant and is expecting her first child which is due in February 2018. A very happy Gomti said, "The feeling of conceiving for the first time is indescribable. I can't thank Asha enough for everything."

Some amazing people make a real impact this summer

It is always wonderful to have people from all walks of life joining us in our efforts to transform lives. This time, we were delighted to have four different individuals from around the world, coming forward and spreading joy and love in our communities. The volunteers include Dave and Chloe Jones (The River Church UK), Sudhanshu Agarwal (India) and Andrew Robertson (Scotland) who taught English to the Asha High School and College students, brushed up the students' problem-solving skills, taught organising skills to sort books and improve reading skills of the children, spent time with the Women's Association as well as played games with Asha's Children Association among others.

Cannot wait to be back again

Andrew Robertson
Student, Scotland

While teaching English in Anna Nagar community for around a month, I have learned a great deal about life in the Delhi slums from the Asha students, and the impact of Asha's work. The hospitality of the locals has been incredible, and I will sorely miss all the great friends I have made here. I will cherish the memories always and surely hope to come back and teach here again in the future.

Blown away by Asha's work...

Dave and Chloe Jones
River Church UK

What an inspiring week! As we visited the slums and projects Asha work in, we were blown away by the genuine community transformation taking place. The precious people we talked and laughed with, who are seizing opportunities for a better life with both hands, gave us much encouragement. For us, a connection has been made with Asha, one that we hope to develop more strongly in the future.

The most fulfilling experience of my life...

Sudhanshu Agarwal
Student, India

Volunteering at Asha was one of the most fulfilling experiences of my life. My volunteering lasted only for four months but the friendships I made will last forever. It taught me that success does not depend on hardships one faces but their determination to achieve even when things go horribly wrong. I went to teach the children at Asha, but ended up being a student. The children here are full of determination. They taught me how to be content, how to sail even when the wind is against you and how scientia ipsa potentia est (knowledge itself is power) still holds true. Knowledge is the greatest gift anyone can ever give to someone, the one I received from Asha. It was a very humbling experience which changed me in ways I could have never imagined. I got the opportunity to experience what true happiness means and I look forward to being involved in future as well.

08 Transforming lives

Case Story: Aarti

Aarti from Seelampur faced poverty, mocking from her father for being a girl-child, slept on an empty stomach, but didn't give up. She took-up several part-time jobs to support her 6 younger siblings when her father went back to his village, leaving the bereft family to provide for themselves. Amidst this, she secured 74% in her class 12 exams. She has battled many odds, that people her age can't fathom.

● Seelampur, New Delhi

Today, Aarti is pursuing a BA programme and dreams of becoming a teacher. The humble girl says, "My life would have been over if Asha had not stepped in. They supported my education and all I can do is pay it forward. Asha instilled in me that even as a girl, I can still achieve anything in life."
